Vaginal Rejuvenation

“We have been married for 23 years and have seen a drastic reduction in our sex life and I’m afraid to say, in my enjoyment. Can anything be done?”

Vaginal rejuvenation has been credited with restoring sexual enjoyment to women who had believed nothing could be done. Vaginal Rejuvenation or Vaginoplasty is a procedure used to enhance those feelings of sexual gratification and allow women to receive and give more pleasure.

Also, an adequate sexual response requires healthy female pelvic organs. A woman’s lifestyle and sexual performance may be seriously affected by her reproductive organs and neighboring pelvic vaginal muscles, which stretch, leaving them loose and weak and affecting the sexual response. A fallen uterus, vagina, bladder or rectum may also affect the menstrual cycle, bowel, urinary habits, as well as the sexual response.

The goal of vaginal rejuvenation, in summary, is to improve the tone and function of the vagina. This surgery returns the organs to their normal position and function, provides relief from symptoms and restores the pelvic muscles to the state generally found in post-adolescent years prior to childbirth, so as to improve the patient’s tactile touch, sensuality, sexuality and self-esteem.

These comments are the response that Edward G. Mendelson, M.D. gives to patients in his Katy gynecology practice when he is asked “Can anything be done?” The answer is “Yes, something can be done.”
